Morton's dedication reads: "To my father, Rev. Wilbur D. Morton Sr., missionary in India, who so well understood the unreasoning faith of childhood, with love, A.D. 1955.” “The dedication is both exciting and heart-wrenching,” Yoder said. “Morton writes of his father, but he also writes about how disappointed he was with his own father as a man and how much he wishes he could have shown him more tenderness and love. It’s a difficult, unique letter to read.” Although Morton dedicated the book to his father, who died in 1960, he reserved the final chapters for Morton himself. He shows himself trying to come to terms with his legacy in his own mind as he approaches the end. “My work is still not done,” Morton writes in his closing. “I am still often haunted by my

Although he initially wanted to be a priest, he eventually started writing and became a prolific author in many

Q: Reduced form of tridiagonal matrix I have been trying to reduce this matrix and haven't been able to do so. I tried using Gaussian elimination method which with r_i and s_i being the rows and columns of the matrix A . I know that the matrix looks like a tridiagonal matrix, but I couldn't get it to that form.

 I was able to get this matrix to be the upper triangular form for the matrix. But I'm not able to find the canonical basis of this matrix. Any help is appreciated. A: You can try Gaussian elimination on this tridiagonal matrix D .

The present invention relates generally to the field of battery technology, and more specifically to batteries and battery packs containing rechargeable batteries that may be used in an electric vehicle. It is known to use lithium-ion batteries in electric vehicles.

Such batteries include several lithium-ion battery cells that are coupled together in series to provide a desired voltage and current to power an electric motor. However, electric vehicles are often subjected to extreme conditions, including high speed/torque and high temperature/humidity, for which conventional lithium-ion batteries may not be optimally suited.
